Welcome to Past Forward: Celebrating Critical Practices. We at India Foundation for the Arts (IFA) are delighted that you have made the time to be here.

As you know, IFA is a not-for-profit, independent, grantmaking organisation that supports research, practice and education in the arts and culture across India, since 1995. We believe that the arts and culture are essential to our individual and community lives, and for a more equitable and just world. As a facilitator, catalyst and provocateur in the field, we support critical investigations, explorations and experiments that push boundaries of knowledge and practice, and challenge dominant narratives.

We believe that the arts enable us to ask questions of our pasts, investigate the present, and imagine possible collective futures. The Arts Practice programme at IFA over the past five years have supported artists engaged in critical practices in the arts to challenge, disrupt and build the many worlds we inhabit in space and time. At this festival celebrating their work, we bring together 40 projects across disciplines such as photography, visual arts, theatre, film, gaming, graphic art, sound, music, dance, and puppetry. Through panel discussions, performances, film screenings, exhibitions and workshops, we hope to make ‘Present’ in ‘Past Forward’ the riveting explorations of these arts practitioners from all over the country. Their provocations will be presented under the themes of Interrogating Pasts, Confluence of Forms, Engaging Communities, Making Meanings of Myths, Thinking Audiences and Imagining Futures.

We are deeply grateful to our philanthropy partners, donors and supporters without whom this festival would not have been possible. We are also thankful that all the artists have taken time out to come and present their work here. And finally, you, the audience – we are so happy that you are present at Past Forward, sharing our anxieties and hopes about the lives we live and the worlds we make.

Thank you

Aruna Ghosh, Executive Director

INTERROGATING PASTS
The past is at once a legacy to treasure and a burden to bear. It is sometimes obstinate, sedimented and at others, free flowing in the way it shapes our present and future. In different ways, notions of the past have gripped the artist’s mind and informed their practice. The projects showcased here point to the multiple ways in which artists have conversed with pasts. While finding inspiration, artists have also challenged, rejected, questioned, critiqued, reinterpreted and departed from the pasts.

CONFLUENCE OF FORMS
Art forms have always existed and thrived in each other’s company. They have evolved through mutual influence and nurturing. Artists working in specific art forms often engage in others to challenge themselves, make experiments, learn new skills or get inspired with unusual possibilities of outcomes. The projects showcased under this theme were in part born out of the desire to see the results of two or more forms in conversation with each other. While some of these projects borrow and build through their respective techniques and methodologies, others provoke new ways of looking at making work.

ENGAGING COMMUNITIES
Artistic and cultural practices of various communities, community knowledge systems, and traditional / contemporary political and social discourses embedded within specific communities, have been at the centre of many arts projects. Practitioners have often drawn strongly on community knowledge, attempted to address questions of community identity/ies and taken their work back into the community space after spending time working with them and making the work. The projects showcased here are representative of the diverse ways in which community engagement in the arts are prevalent today.
MAKING MEANINGS OF MYTHS
Myths have played a significant role in helping humanity interpret their lives, understand their experiences and make meaning of their existence. They connect quotidian lived realities to the larger concepts of power and truth. Artists have always used and borrowed from myths to make works that attempt to extend beyond the immediate struggles of living, to seek broader questions of life. The projects showcased under this theme represent some of these attempts. While some of the projects relook at myths of the past, others consider the possibility of constructing new ones.

THINKING AUDIENCES
Far from being passive consumers, the audiences have always played a powerful role in shaping the trajectory of arts practices. They have encouraged practitioners to chart new paths, discover new content and find new ways of communicating it to the larger world. Practitioners too, on their part, have tried in many ways to break boundaries with their audiences and make them integral to their work. Some of the projects showcased here have attempted to build new audiences, enabled wider public access to their work and embraced audiences as active participants in their work.

IMAGINING FUTURES
The human race today finds itself irrevocably trapped between two conflicting emotions about its future - the anxiety and fear of slowly destroying this planet; the hope and desire that a better world is possible. Artists have always been at the forefront of imagining the diverse possibilities that our futures can bring upon us. The projects showcased under this theme bring together some of the ways in which they envisage, project and frame our imminent destinies. While some of the projects raise questions about our nature of occupying the planet, others explore new ways of experiencing and learning about the arts and its connection to life.
THE JUMPING PROJECT

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2019 | 11:00 AM – 01:00 PM
AMPHITHEATRE

The Jumping Project began with a desire to create an environment that values the immediacy of action over artistic interpretation. The physicality of jumping is explored for many reasons. Foremost among them is the paradox contained in the act of jumping – a primeval impulse to escape and reach for freedom, while at the same time an expression of inevitable fall – being bound by the forces of gravity. Jumping is also a physicality that is common to other bodily disciplines such as sport and martial arts, where the decorative element is stripped off to reveal a pure mechanics of the body.

This workshop takes us through the building blocks of The Jumping Project as a way to unlearn and relearn our bodies.

DECODING INTIMACY, DESIRE AND AFFECT

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2019 | 11:00 AM - 01:00 PM
BOARD ROOM

The workshop aims to bring together the participants and collectively broadening our understanding of gender, sexuality and desire through references to the choreographic work Queen-size. By watching short clips of the work and unpacking it in discussion, the participants will be encouraged to deconstruct and read the work through the lenses of action, affect and interpretation as well as experience some of the movement propositions explored in the work.

Through an introduction to Queen-size’s choreographic structures, its triggers, creation process and challenges, the workshop proposes to open out questions around aesthetics, intimacy and viewership. With a discussion on the performance’s relationship with Section 377 of the Indian Penal Code, along with references to the history of the struggle against 377 in India, the workshop will open a discussion on the political potency of performance and its particular relationship with sexuality and activism.

BLACK HOLE

LANGUAGE: English, Hindi

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 2019 | 07:30 PM - 09:15 PM
AUDITORIUM

Amongst cosmological objects, black holes - regions in space time where the gravitational force is so strong that nothing, not even light, can escape - have a special place, evoking a sense of mystery and awe for physicists and ordinary people alike. A woman, a single white sheet, and the cosmos - these are the three elements that comprise this work. An ordinary person begins to explore ideas from theoretical physics, delving into theories of space and time in an attempt to find a greater engagement with the universe and with herself. The notion of ‘singularities’ forms a running theme through the piece: both the singularity of our experience of the self - entirely contained and accessible to oneself alone - and the singularity inside a black hole, a point where space and time fold in on themselves and disappear.

As concepts from astrophysics intertwine with personal narratives exploring love, loss, mortality, experiential limits, and the bodies we live in, this piece examines our thirst for knowledge, our hunger for experience, and how the two combine to create our understanding of the cosmos we inhabit. In terms of the performance language, it moves between real and mundane, the scientific, and the dream like - images, sounds and text forming a fabric of space time that explores the outer cosmos and the inner cosmos.

The songs of this album carry stories of displacement, migration and hardships in the lives of the Manipuri diaspora in the Barak and Surma valleys of Assam and Bangladesh.

Songs from Snakes, songs and music from Three Hearings on the Existence of Snakes in the Human Bloodstream is presented, while attempting to give a gist of the story. The audience’s questions become a part of the performance, as do the actors’ own reflections and associations.

Three Hearings on the Existence of Snakes in the Human Bloodstream is an adaptation of the science-fiction story by James Alan Gardner. It is a fantastical account of the history of how ‘otherness’ is manufactured and how differences between human beings are willfully magnified, preserved and even worshipped.

A MUSICAL PERFORMANCE: EXPERIENCING NOORI

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 12:00 PM – 01:00 PM
FOYER | FIRST FLOOR

Kavish has been working on the creation of a new musical instrument that he has named Noori. He was deeply inspired to create a new instrument after a gentleman, watching him play the guitar, advised him to ‘create his own music’. It was then that he set out to find for himself a new sound vocabulary and a new instrument that would enable a contemporary musical expression, while still keeping its connections to the rich legacy of Indian string instruments.

Noori is a string instrument belonging to the family of guitar, sarod, rabab. One can play all three schools of music - Western, Indian and Arabic (maqamat) on it. The soundboard is made of skin which can be tuned and it is also used as a percussive membrane. Kavish will be performing his original songs on Noori and guitar solo, along with his poetry.

VITHU MAZHA—SONGS OF THE WOMEN WARIKARI POETS

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 04:00 PM - 04:45 PM
FOYER | FIRST FLOOR

While the warikari tradition of Maharashtra is fairly well known across India, the sung poems of the women mystics are rarely sung in the tradition today. Perhaps it is because the women talk about bhakti in myriad hues, going beyond the comfortable frameworks of worship and devotion, and take on forms and characters that one would hardly expect in traditional devotional poetry. They challenge singular notions of bhakti and devotion, and are deeply relevant for our times - both in the context of women’s lived experiences and non-linear ideas of bhakti today. Shruthi has been researching these poems and setting them to music. While most of these poems exist in print, they have been largely ignored in traditional performance and practice. Inspired by the translations of Dr Jacqui Daukes, Shruthi set out to compose and record these poems, using both traditional musical idioms of the abhang, and going beyond.

While all of the compositions to be presented here are rooted to a tradition, they take on new meanings and forms with music that brings out nuances of the poetry. Shruteendra Katagade and Yuji Nakagawa worked with Shruthi to create new ways of interpreting abhangs.

This play is set in the 8th century, at a Matha in a fictional town called Beerpur. It is the time when the Pala kings were ruling the east and large parts of northern India. These kings were Buddhist; Buddhism was at its peak and on the verge of declining. There had been mass conversions to Buddhism. The story revolves around this Hindu temple town which is surrounded by Buddhists. The protagonist is Agnivesh, a scholar in the Matha. The head of the Matha, Nath Nand, who has always separated religion from politics, is faced with a choice upon retirement to the Muktidham, to die and achieve salvation.

Which of his students shall be his successor? Will it be Yuyutsu, who believes in opening up the doors of the temple for the lower castes? Or Agnivesh, who believes in raising an armed resistance to Buddhism? This will be a dramatised reading of excerpts from the play Muktidham.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM - 01:00 PM | BOARD ROOM

What does it mean to leave? Or to prepare to leave? Or prepare to mean to leave? What does returning mean to those who only buy one-way tickets? Something to be deferred for as long as possible, like a promise, bouncing amidst stars in the night sky of a distant galaxy. Until now, an irreversible exit from the earth was only possible in death, inevitable for life. It is now an option. To stay is as much of an option as to leave. The search for humanity's next bold frontier begins with a one-way ticket.

The Common Task is an experimental HD video film on the Mars One project, which aims to set up the first human settlement in Mars. It is about the proposition of a one-way trip to Mars, and explores the philosophical possibilities of interplanetary travel. Woven around the stories of two applicants who want to make this journey, the film includes scientific reports, plans, charts, and personal journals, interspersed with interviews with future astronauts.

The city is undergoing beautification at the turn of the century. The city-council has decided to make it revel in its new avatar, and thus, the entire population of street dogs must be driven out from the city. But, what could possibly be the most inconspicuous and hassle-free method of removing the dogs from the streets? After heated debates and discussions regarding the economic feasibility and efficiency of each method, the authorities decide to gather wayward street dogs around, and imprison them within the pinjrapoles - homes for abandoned animals, which are effectively ‘concentration’ camps. But will the dogs go without a whimper? Why is the ‘Dog Star’ shining so brightly? Is there a secret message? Can the (under) dogs fight back?

An adaptation of the classic Nabarun Bhattacharya science-fiction, the plot revolves around subjects of anthropocene, ecology, war, violence, political crises, and possible revolution. This ‘short’ narrates a climatic moment, as the dogs contemplate – what is to be done.

Kids are playing by a pond. An iron ore factory at the horizon is emitting thick, brown smoke. The evening sky is cloudy. We are in Bela, a small village in eastern India that is rather difficult to find on the map. Beyond the railway line is a Sal forest where young men practice Chhau dance. The women of the village frequent the forest to gather firewood. Inhabited by tribal communities, namely the Kurmis, the Santhals and the Mundas, Bela is part of the erstwhile Jungle Mahal, an area infamous as the ‘red corridor’ of the Maoist movement in the post-colonial period. The violent past of this region goes back further, to the forced migration during the colonial rule.

Who does the forest belong to and who belongs to the forest? Refraining from traditional interviews, this creative documentary is an intimate portrait of a tribal village at the threshold of ‘development’.

Intervals is a short, experimental film on time, memory and technology. It documents the history of sound recording and playback, using over a hundred photographs and footage of sound related equipment such as phonographs, gramophones and radios. In doing so, it brings together fragmentary traces of analogue technologies from across a century. Animating the archive, nostaligically celebrating the material, mechanical magical world of analogue devices, this experimental film emerged out of research that formed part of my larger project on an early twentieth century Indian musician.

Duration: 02 minutes and 30 seconds

Departures was created as a formal experiment. In it, drawn animation over a photographic portrait serves as a meditation on degradation, erasures and disappearance. Combining a recorded song, and a ghostly photograph, this short work uses the face and remarkable voice of the early twentieth-century musician Abdul Karim Khan (1872–1937) to provoke these questions-what can technology retain of a human presence? how much is lost or forgotten, overwritten by time?

Duration: 01 minute and 30 seconds

The Journey is an excerpt from a longer animated film on the life of the early twentieth century musician Abdul Karim Khan (1872–1937), this clip recounts his train journey from Baroda to the bustling colonial city of Bombay in 1898.

Let’s Sing an Old Song: A Presentation of Photographs features photographs of Jatra artistes. These images, over a period of time, capture the changing lives of the artistes, the characters they played, and their connection and allegiance with the Jatra form. They also depict them largely in the characters’ garb - but offstage, in the spaces they inhabit and occupy in the present day.

Born into an extended family of Jatra artistes, Soumya began this photo-series documenting his uncle who retired from Jatra and joined a railway factory, hoping to do what he could not as an artiste - earn a living. Jatra is a theatre form of undivided Bengal that dates back to the 16th century. The form employs dialogue, monologue, songs and instrumental music to tell stories. The plots of Jatra plays vary from Indian mythology and historical events to contemporary societal issues and they are enacted upon wooden stages without any barriers between the actors and the audience, facilitating direct communication.

The Scholar Musician and the Seni Ustads: Snapshots from a personal archive features digitised collection of papers belonging to Birendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury (1903-1975), the late music scholar and musician of Gauripur in Assam. This exhibition is an attempt to showcase the depth, diversity and individual eccentricities of a personal archive and to review its significance for both music-making and for its public history.

This exercise helps establish the unparalleled influence of a remarkable lineage of teachers - hereditary ustad, senis and non senis whose importance as teachers, torch-bearers of a classical tradition remains underrepresented in public perception. The musical material was integrated into the collection with artistic inputs provided by practitioner-collaborator, Professor Sanjay Bandyopadhyay.

SARBAJIT SEN
ON VIEW: Excerpts from the graphic novel titled Ramblings

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30 – FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM – 06:00 PM
SAANCHI GALLERY

Ramblings is a graphic novel aiming at mapping an entire Bengali middle class mindscape with its age-old romantic revolutionary illusions and dreams and, later, its despair after the collapse of the Left Front government in West Bengal.

Ramblings has seen both blood on the streets and blunt boredom spreading roots in our brains. The story is chiefly confined to a very mundane suburb where the author grew up. The dramatis personae – mostly nowhere people – are from bleak squatters’ colonies. The place almost falls out of time and yet it is somehow connected with the many political and ideological upheavals in the world outside.
A MUSEUM OF DUBIOUS SPLENDOR

DHRUV JANI

FOR PLAY: An interactive digital game titled A Museum of Dubious Splendors

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30 – FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM – 06:00 PM
FOYER | SECOND FLOOR

A Museum of Dubious Splendors is a storybook from the world of Somewhere. It is a quiet game about prosaic objects and spurious histories, and an irreverent rumination on the nature of an archive and the violence inherent in its forms of recollection.

Adapted from a collection of etiological tales written by the Gujarati poet Mir Umar Hassan, this game is an attempt at translating and restoring the original fragmented work into coherent fiction.
HOLD NOTHING DEAR: ARMENIANS OF CALCUTTA
ALAKANANDA NAG
ON VIEW: Photographs, Photobook

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30 – FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM – 06:00 PM
SAANCHI GALLERY

_Hold Nothing Dear: Armenians of Calcutta_ is a photo book with text and photographs on Calcutta’s oldest minority community, the Armenians. The book brings to the surface that the first Christian grave in Calcutta is that of an Armenian from 1630, sixty years before Job Charnok docked on its shores.

Could the Armenians be considered the founders of modern Calcutta? It looks at important contributions made by the community in terms of architecture, trade, culture. With no designs on colonising, Calcutta was their home. For the few that remain, past glory, a patchy recollection of better times and the idea of being Armenian is what remains.
MANIYARA
RANJINI KRISHNAN

IDEAL VIEWING: One person at a time. The door is closed when the viewer enters Maniyara

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30 – FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM – 06:00 PM
FOYER | FIRST FLOOR

Maniyara is a two channel video installation set in a traditional south Indian wedding chamber. The central projection is titled Daughters of Scheherazade and side projection is called I-poem. The physical installation has more elements of a wedding chamber.

Maniyara translated from Malayalam is a nuptial chamber - a knotted time-space at the edge of bridal fantasy. It is a brides’ place of contemplation. Nuptial chamber is a shadowy, nocturnal and oneiric space where the bride becomes the story. It is also a claustrophobic space that is capable of invoking escape fantasies.
MEN OF PUKAR
ABUL KALAM AZAD
ON VIEW: Photographs

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30 – FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 01, 2019 | 10:00 AM – 06:00 PM
SAANCHI GALLERY

Men of Pukar is the third part of a group of independent yet interconnected photographic images from Abul Kalam Azad’s long-time series titled Story of Love, Desire and Agony that takes a re-look at the places and people mentioned in the Tamil classical epic tragedy Cilappathikaram in the contemporary context. At a time when issues of identity, gender stereotypes and territory are becoming causes for bloodshed and carnage, Story of Love, Desire and Agony strives to unveil the limiting cultural constructs around identity, territory, gender and unravel our unified past and collective lineage.

The monochrome images of Men of Pukar series were shot in the contemporary regions corresponding to ancient Sea Port Pukar (Kaveripoornathinam) situated at the end-point of river Cauvery. Building upon the intrinsic connections between poetry and photography, this series recollects the memories of the legendary port city that lives in the minds of the people and the lingering lifestyle remnants of the prolonged cross border relations, through its men. Some of these monochrome images may contain direct references to Sangam literary texts, but such connections are secondary at best; the primary text to be referred to in the reading of these images is simply the life and lifestyle of common people who are usually absent in the mainstream historical and cultural discourse.
